

HEADMASTER'S WEEKLY NEWSLETTER

Dear Parents

This last week has seen the children busy engaging with a number of different events, each in their own way creating discussion, debate and no small amount of interest across the school. The week started with the celebration of International Women's Day, with a powerful assembly on the theme of embracing equity. The children learnt about the importance of not just saying or writing about embracing equity, but seeing it as something that we all need to think about, know, value and embrace, so that we believe in it unconditionally, helping to make society and the world a truly inclusive place.

The middle part of the week had a mathematics focus around World Maths day, with the children engaged in a variety of activities within their maths lessons, while the end of the week brought with it our book fair, courtesy of Book Bugs and Dragon Tales, an independent book shop in Norwich. These events helped to show the children the importance that both reading and numeracy have, while also having fun and learning new skills.

It was delightful to see all the children in Year 5 and 6 taking part in the inter-house cross country yesterday, as well as all the girls in Year 5 and 6 competing in the house netball competition earlier this week, alongside the usual array of hockey and netball matches.

Elsewhere, Year 4 enjoyed a trip to West Stow to learn all about Anglo-Saxon life while Maple class in Year 1 regaled us all with their class assembly on wolves.

Rehearsals for the senior production of The Lion King have been in full flow, with the performances now just two weeks away, while the first read-throughs for the Year 6 production next term got underway.

Whatever the weekend holds for you and your family, I hope you also manage the opportunity for some rest and recuperation.

With best wishes
